Oxford consists of 38 self-governing colleges: 28 colleges for men, 5 colleges for women, 5 colleges for both men and women. Each college has its own hall, chapel and library. The university has about 20,000 students.

Oxford houses the Bodleian Library. It is one of the most important libraries in the world with its 3,000,000 books and 50,000 manuscripts. There is the Radcliffe Camera, a classical rotunda now used as a reading-room for the Bodleian. The cost of studies in the university is rather high. Students have to pay for using libraries and laboratories, as for taking exams.

A characteristic feature of Oxford is that it keeps the traditions of the past (the Middle Ages). All the students wear long black gowns and students' caps. Without his or her gown no student is allowed to call on a tutor, to have dinner in the college dining-room or attend a lecture.

Teachers in Oxford almost 4 000 people, 70 members of the Royal society and more than 100 members of the British Academy.
